

In elementary school you got report cards, but in middle school report cards are a bit different. In elementary school you didn't exactly get a number or letter grade. You just got a bunch of checks in the columns and comments like "advanced" or "proficient" for the main subjects like English, math, science and social studies. The report cards in middle school show your number grades for each class you take. But some classes are pass/fail meaning what it means. You either pass or fail depending on how well you do. You get an overall average on your report card, which is all of your grades from all your classes added up together. And you get an average of what your complete grade is for a quarter. There are four quarters throughout the school year. A quarter is a part of the school year. If you score an 85 or above, you qualify for honor roll, which is good. If you want to get a good average, you simply get good grades, participate in class, have good behavior and do your homework and class work. By following these tips you should be able to do well in all your classes.

One of the many worries of many incoming seventh graders is report cards. You have to try your hardest to do well on your report card. If you try your hardest, you will get good comments and hopefully good numbers also. If you sit in class the whole time and do nothing, your report card won't come out as well as you want it to. You must spend your time wisely. If you have a test, you should make time to study for it. You should also make time to do your homework. It is important to participate and pay attention during classes because teachers like when student do these things.

Every ten weeks a surprise will be come to your parents in the mail. This surprise is known as your report card. Your middle school report card is a little different from your elementary school report card. You will get a number grade from each subject teacher. If you keep good grades of 85 or higher you can make honor roll. Failing is below 65. Report cards are given out four times a year and teachers send out progress reports in the middle of each marking period so you have an idea of how well or badly you are doing. As long as you do your homework and study you should receive a good report card.
